The Daily Press

HONGKONG, MARCH 28TH, 1868.

THERE is one consideration connected with a certain enactment introduced last year which may have escaped the attention of an influential class of persons in this colony, who have from time to time taken the trouble to make their views known, always, it is needless to point out, with striking and remarkable results. The enactment we refer to is one, indeed, concerning which the memory may be trusted on the subject, we have already written once or twice. It is—Ordinance No. 12, of 1866, more generally known, perhaps, as the Stamp Act. The particular consideration, however, to which we want to refer just now, is one which strange to say has been overlooked. It has not only been overlooked by ourselves, but what is still more extraordinary by all those gentlemen who have taken such an active and influential part in the local politics of this great and glorious island, who have remonstrated with the Governor and endeavoured to "work the oracle" at home, and who have distinguished themselves as the only persons in Hongkong capable of ruling their political conduct by a higher standard than that of expediency. With the sin of Sir RICHARD MACDONNELL in permitting the game of pit, pc, nan, se, in certain houses, with the view of divorcing that pursuit from robbery and crimes of violence, we are all well acquainted. Further, more also with that ingenious compromise by which the Duke of BUCKINGHAM proposed to eradicate the atrocity of the sin,—to dye it white. We know it is declared that the only condition on which the continuance of licensed gambling-houses can be tolerated by persons who love virtue and religion, and hate immorality and vice, is that of paying a sum of about $120,000 now in the public treasury, (with which otherwise a new Civil Hospital might be built or the Praya be rounded), to the owners of the licensed gambling-houses. If, besides doing this, the Government helped them to grow rich by reducing the expenses of their reputable trade by some $16,000 a month, then the Duke of BUCKINGHAM and all persons who admire his policy on this subject, would feel that the Governor had done genuine and might receive absolution.

We are not going to discuss the wisdom and beauty of the system proposed, nor dilate upon the singular fate which has made simple-minded, but well-meaning professors of religion, the best friends of the gambling-house keepers. Struck with the importance of keeping up moral appearances, however, in the manner which is prescribed, we want to point out without loss of time how the Stamp Act itself, that delicious institution, so beloved by the Home Government and the opponents of the present system of dealing with the Tai-pe houses, actually works as an instrument for the collection of a revenue from the worst kind of gambling. Have the defenders of public morality in Hongkong duly considered the nature of the stamp upon share transfers? What are share transfers, in nine cases out of ten, but the instruments for legalised gambling? Only here and there, at rare intervals, are the transfers required for persons who are bona fide investors. Hundreds of shares change hands every day, which are bought and sold on what is euphemistically described as "speculation," but what, with an unbecoming readiness to condemn vice in all forms and under all disguises, we denounce as gambling! And this Government,—the Government of a Christian and, we may add, a British colony, props up its public income by levying tribute on the gamblers of the share market! Is it frightful to contemplate? Only one course can be taken, now that the true character of the transfer stamp is exposed. At all events, only one course can be acceptable to the Duke of BUCKINGHAM and all persons who sympathise with the theory which he has mixed into endorsing. All persons who can show that they have paid for stamps on share transfers, ought at once to have their money back on application to the Government. In some cases, indeed, if any have been that the transfers on which they paid stamps were required for the legitimate purpose of investment. They, of course, not being guilty of immoral conduct, could have no claim, under the Duke's theory, to a drawback. The plan would be to insist the amount of the stamp repayable to all persons prepared with an affidavit that they had entered the share market for the purpose of "speculation" pure and simple. If this means proved detrimental to the financial interests of the Government, it would be easy to levy the amount thus lost on some document of a purely commercial character. That would only injure trade, and not lead to such a frightful result as the offence of a prejudice.

MR. SPEKE'S reappearance, announced in the telegram by the Benares, throws a very ludicrous light upon the reams of articles, and yards of letters which have been written about him in the papers. The whole transaction is the most elaborate "sell" from which the British public has been made to suffer for a long time. A clergyman, well connected, greatly respected, warmated by all his friends sound in mind, comes up to London to attend a wedding, goes out to buy a hat the preceding afternoon, and is not heard of again. It would seem from the evidence of various letters written to the papers, that similar disappearances had taken place before, and the circumstances surrounding these, in none of which had the mystery been solved, always pointed to a single solution of the difficulty. Other cases brought to light during the animated discussion about Mr. SPEKE, showed how the narrators had narrowly escaped falling into traps laid for them by ruffians thirsting for their watches and their blood. A nervous man about London during the excitement, might have been worked into a miserable state of apprehension, in which he would have been prepared to see the emissary of a murderous gang in every innocent stranger who asked him the way to Charing Cross, and a deep laid plan for his destruction in the conduct of every cabman who wanted a fare. The wit of all the amateur detectives about the town seems to have been stimulated, and theories, as elaborate as those which have been invented about the Man in the Iron Mask, or the Lost Tribes of Israel, were worked out to account for the miraculous disappearance of Mr. SPEKE. To some persons with a romantic turn of mind, nothing would serve but a secret and disastrous passion for the lady whose bridal he had come to witness. The despairing lover had taxed his strength too far, and as the fatal moment approached nothing remained for him but what Mr. TOOTS used to describe as the silent tomb. According to others, he had been mistaken for Mr. GATHORNE HARDY, and made away with by an enterprising, but deluded, party of Fenians. As for the various tricks by which he might have been beguiled from the path of virtue and Victoria-street, Westminster, into by haunts of vice and intoxication, the fertile imagination of correspondents suggested an endless variety, undismayed by indignant protests from the missing gentleman's friends, and his character as a well-conducted clergyman, never known to drink. After furnishing the public with a month's excitement, Mr. SPEKE is discovered, disguised as a driver, in Cornwall! Probably the simple explanation of everything will be that the gentleman is insane. A madman's freak has been gravely discussed all over the civilized world wherever the English language is spoken and telegrams or the Times can penetrate. How desperately thousands of men and women in various departments of life are panting for a hundredth part of the notice which has been bestowed upon one middle-aged country parson, who did nothing to deserve it but drop his hat in Bridge-walk, and make an excursion to Cornwall, without telling his friends. To think of the books that would have made their authors famous if they could only have been read with as much attention, as the ingenuity speculations and wondering about this poor cracked runaway! To think of the clever inventions which have been worthless for years, while the inventors, growing hopeless at last in their value, refuse to make them known to an indifferent public! Just and merciful Egyptian! To think further, Mr. ROZARIO said the ticket for a ring had been taken to the pawnbroker, and he had produced the identical gold ring which had been taken!

The pawnbroker said that when the prisoner came to him he had not had his master had told him to pawn the ring to provide food.

Mr. GOODHUE said that was a very improbable story. the pawnbroker should be careful not to take such articles from strangers, he must return the ring to Mr. ROZARIO.

The prisoner said he had informed his master of his having pawned the ring, and proceeded to relate it when he had money.

Mr. GOODHUE said he must punish robberies by domestic servants severely; the prisoner would have to go to prison for three months with hard labour.

During the morning Mr. TOLLER made an application to Mr. GOODHUE to give a new hearing to the case of LOONG A-YU, who was sentenced to three months' imprisonment for allowing three to escape from a cargo boat belonging to Mr. HOOK. The prisoner was captain of the rice boat, and the rice was alleged to have been surreptitiously taken from the cargo-boat by an old beggar woman in a sampan.

Mr. TOLLER said he would be able to produce the mate of the vessel from which the rice was being unloaded, and also Mr. WALKER, which latter would give the prisoner an excellent character.

Mr. GOODHUE said he would be very glad to release the case if he thought the fresh evidence brought by Mr. TOLLER would be likely to change his former decision. he thought Mr. TOLLER had given satisfactory proof his being able to bring forward some evidence, and he would therefore release the case on Monday next at eleven o'clock.

The Bishopric of Natal.

The Bishop of Capetown and his friends have at length found a champion who will call them to account for their proceedings in the case of the Bishop of Natal. This champion is a judge of great congratulation to the High Church party, who may regret it with just cause as a proof of the fact that a sufficient number of persons to subscribe a very considerable sum of money adopt their view of the case. He, however, the matter is regarded from a reasonable point of view, it surely is about as small a transaction as ever attracted any considerable share of public attention. And yet there is something serio-comic in the strong manner with which the Bishop of Capetown and his friends have pursued it for so many years and in the exultation with which they regard the result of their labours. The matters stand thus: The Bishop of Natal publishes books which the Bishop of Capetown regards as heretical, and for which he affects to term him a "horrid" animal, whose existence should not only be stopped by a correct military parade, but to the time of stones a heretic on a gridiron by the Bishop said to be deposed. The Colonial Courts recognise his episcopal character, and give him the possession of all the advantages which pertain to it. In a word, Dr. COLENSO has every tangible thing which goes to make up what is meant by being a bishop. He has the title, he has the endowment, he has the right of presiding in certain places, and of exercising a certain jurisdiction. He can ordain clergymen, and his ordination would have to be recognized as valid by every Bishop in England. He is, in a word, Bishop of Natal against all comers, just as William III. was King of England against all comers. In this state of things the Bishop of Capetown thinks that he has indicted a great wrong by persuading another clergyman to go out and act the part of Bishop. He is, it appears, to be consecrated in a curious hole-and-corner way at St. Sepulchre's. It is time to go out to Natal and there to perform episcopal functions for the benefit of all who are willing to accept his ministrations. Practically there can be no objection to his legal right to do so. He will be in the same sort of position as a Roman Catholic bishop in the same colony. He will, of course, have no other harm to apprehend than a pelting with rotten eggs and other rights or privileges than those which he may acquire by contract. His presence will in no way affect the position of Dr. COLENSO, and as to the differences between him and those who look upon him as an arch-heretic. The only result will be that the storm will blow rather harder in the very small teacup which is in a state of so much agitation already. The allegiance of the twenty or thirty obscure clergymen who form the episcopal locality of Natal will be rather more divided than it used to be, and that will be all.—Pall Mall Gazette.

"It is said that the Queen is greatly pleased with the reception her diary has met with, and the effect is to make her more anxious about the publication of the second volume of the "Life of the Prince Consort." It was being buried in forward vigorously until the accident to Mr. Theodore Martin happened. That accident will delay its publication for a short time.

An Irishwoman now engaged by a lady as cook, professing herself competent to undertake the duty. In a day or two after a hare was sent to the kitchen to be dressed for dinner. How to prepare it was puzzler to Bridget, so she went to her mistress to inquire. Knocking at the parlour door, she was told to "Come in." She entered, dangling the hare by the hind legs, and with interrogative face ejaculated, "Yerra sill I singe it, marm, or pluck it?"

Supreme Court.

IN ADMIRALTY.

BEFORE CHIEF-JUSTICE SMALE.

The Sir. Achilles v. The Eastward Ho.

THIRD DAY.

Mr. Pollard continued his argument.—Having disposed of the question of freight, he next went to the consideration of towage or salvage. He first put it that if there was a contract made for the services rendered, the question was not of towage or salvage, but one of whether this contract was carried out and fulfilled. On the case of the Carolina, he put it that there was in the present instance a contract, of this there could be no doubt. when the evidence now before the court was considered. Now, in regard to the evidence, he submitted that if one body of testimony was found consistent in all its parts, the court was bound to take this testimony in support of the facts alleged. Such a body of testimony was he contended to be found in the evidence given by all the witnesses brought forward on behalf of the impugnant. Why the first officer of the Achilles was sent on board the Eastward Ho the promovents did not say, but they were very ready in detailing what he did when he got on board, but even to the breeches full of a man, an officer, remaining on board, no significance could be attached. for even if the service were one of salvage, this would not assist or materially alter the fact in any way. The captain of the Eastward Ho having been in Hongkong before, knew that there were steam-tugs here available for the purpose of towing, and did also the master of the Achilles, and it would have been entirely compliance and a very simple matter for the master of the Eastward Ho to have sent a note to Hongkong by the Achilles, requesting that a tug might be sent out to him. The promovents had made a great deal about the extra services that had been performed, because their vessel was a steamer, and yet it is on evidence that as soon as the steamer took hold of the ship, she reduced her speed to one-third power, and instead of expediting them on their journey, actually retarded their progress; for not, that the captain, but also the pilot distinctly swore that without the steamer, they could, with the aids they had, and the breeze then blowing, have reached Hongkong between eleven and twelve o'clock that night, and yet with the aid of the powerful and splendid steamer, to a description of which considerable space was given in act on petition, they were detained eight hours, not reaching Hongkong until four the next morning. For a distance of 35 miles it had been eight hours. If the steamer had continued in her course she would probably have reached Hongkong that evening at eight o'clock, giving her four hours to do the 35 miles; it was then in utter of the Eastward Ho to witness sent them for the woman, but they came back with the sergeant, who laid them in charge. the woman was also with them, and her son was not brought the ship in very much the same time it had taken the Achilles to tow her in. If such a note had been on board, perhaps the steamer would have put on a few more coals and hurried herself up.

His Lordship asked Mr. Pollard if he thought she would really get on more coal if she had such a note on board?

Mr. Pollard, on second consideration thought she would not. He had made a mistake about using more coal, and also Mr. Walker, which latter would give the prisoner an excellent character.

Mr. Goodhue said he would be very glad to release the case if he thought the fresh evidence brought by Mr. Toller would be likely to change his former decision. he thought Mr. Toller had given satisfactory proof his being able to bring forward some evidence, and he would therefore release the case on Monday next at eleven o'clock.

BEFORE E. W. GOODHUE, ESQ.

A PARSEE IN TROUBLE.

Meeta, a respectable-looking Parsee, doing business as a broker in Peel Street, was charged with being drunk, and assaulting Yu-seng. This is not the first appearance of Mr. Meeta in a police-court which. Yu-seng said yesterday evening, about 7 o'clock, the prisoner came to his shop and asked for some betel-nut, witness said that that was nothing, and with his smiles, when defendant seized him by the neck and struck him, thereby causing the loss of some of the weights of the scale.

The defendant denied the charge "in toto," saying he was not drunk nor had he assaulted the complainant.

Inspector Dalziel, however, said the defendant was under the influence of liquor when brought to the station.

Mr. Goodhue said although he regretted to see a man of defendant's appearance in the dock, yet he must fine him $2.

ASSAULT ON THE POLICE.

Sergeant Kalla Khan charged two men with committing an assault upon him yesterday evening.

The sergeant said last night he was in Third-street on duty, when he heard a crowd of Chinamen making a noise, he went up to them, and the two accused, and his pistol, nearly taken from him; he did not see if the men in the crowd were armed; Mr. O'Toole came to his assistance, when he made an outcry. He was actually pulled their progress; for not, that he had the captain, but also the pilot distinctly sworn that without the steamer, they could, with the aids they had, and the breeze then blowing, have reached Hongkong between eleven and twelve o'clock that night, and yet with the aid of the powerful and splendid steamer, to a description of which considerable space was given in action petition; they were detained eight hours, not reaching Hongkong until four the next morning. For a distance of 35 miles it had been eight hours. If the steamer had continued in her course she would probably have reached Hongkong that evening at eight o'clock, giving her four hours to do the 35 miles; it was then in utter of the Eastward Ho to witness sent them for the woman, but they came back with the sergeant, who laid them in charge. the woman was also with them, and her son was not brought the ship in very much the same time it had taken the Achilles to tow her in. If such a note had been on board, perhaps the steamer would have put on a few more coals and hurried herself up.

His Lordship asked Mr. Pollard if he thought she would really get on more coal if she had such a note on board?

Mr. Pollard, on second consideration thought she would not. He had made a mistake about using more coal, and also Mr. Walker, which latter would give the prisoner an excellent character.

Mr. Goodhue said he would be very glad to release the case if he thought the fresh evidence brought by Mr. Toller would be likely to change his former decision. he thought Mr. Toller had given satisfactory proof his being able to bring forward some evidence, and he would therefore release the case on Monday next at eleven o'clock.

The Bishopric of Natal.

The Bishop of Capetown and his friends have at length found a champion who will call them to account for their proceedings in the case of the Bishop of Natal. This champion is a judge of great congratulation to the High Church party, who may regret it with just cause as a proof of the fact that a sufficient number of persons to subscribe a very considerable sum of money adopt their view of the case. He, however, the matter is regarded from a reasonable point of view, it surely is about as small a transaction as ever attracted any considerable share of public attention. And yet there is something serio-comic in the strong manner with which the Bishop of Capetown and his friends have pursued it for so many years and in the exultation with which they regard the result of their labours. The matters stand thus: The Bishop of Natal publishes books which the Bishop of Capetown regards as heretical, and for which he affects to term him a "horrid" animal, whose existence should not only be stopped by a correct military parade, but to the time of stones a heretic on a gridiron by the Bishop said to be deposed. The Colonial Courts recognise his episcopal character, and give him the possession of all the advantages which pertain to it. In a word, Dr. COLENSO has every tangible thing which goes to make up what is meant by being a bishop. He has the title, he has the endowment, he has the right of presiding in certain places, and of exercising a certain jurisdiction. He can ordain clergymen, and his ordination would have to be recognized as valid by every Bishop in England. He is, in a word, Bishop of Natal against all comers, just as William III. was King of England against all comers. In this state of things the Bishop of Capetown thinks that he has indicted a great wrong by persuading another clergyman to go out and act the part of Bishop. He is, it appears, to be consecrated in a curious hole-and-corner way at St. Sepulchre's. It is time to go out to Natal and there to perform episcopal functions for the benefit of all who are willing to accept his ministrations. Practically there can be no objection to his legal right to do so. He will be in the same sort of position as a Roman Catholic bishop in the same colony. He will, of course, have no other harm to apprehend than a pelting with rotten eggs and other rights or privileges than those which he may acquire by contract. His presence will in no way affect the position of Dr. COLENSO, and as to the differences between him and those who look upon him as an arch-heretic. The only result will be that the storm will blow rather harder in the very small teacup which is in a state of so much agitation already. The allegiance of the twenty or thirty obscure clergymen who form the episcopal locality of Natal will be rather more divided than it used to be, and that will be all.—Pall Mall Gazette.

"It is said that the Queen is greatly pleased with the reception her diary has met with, and the effect is to make her more anxious about the publication of the second volume of the "Life of the Prince Consort." It was being buried in forward vigorously until the accident to Mr. Theodore Martin happened. That accident will delay its publication for a short time.

An Irishwoman now engaged by a lady as cook, professing herself competent to undertake the duty. In a day or two after a hare was sent to the kitchen to be dressed for dinner. How to prepare it was puzzler to Bridget, so she went to her mistress to inquire. Knocking at the parlour door, she was told to "Come in." She entered, dangling the hare by the hind legs, and with interrogative face ejaculated, "Yerra sill I singe it, marm, or pluck it?"

The Circus.

Notwithstanding the very unpleasant, not to say severe weather of last evening, the Pavilion of the Great World Circus was filled with as large an audience of Europeans as was doubtless ever got together before in this colony, to witness the first performance of the show previous to its leaving for Canton. Great praise to any that the performance was a good one, especially when for the first night it went off so smoothly as it did last evening. But there was little opportunity for such institution critics to find fault.

One of the great features of the evening was the introduction of the splendid horse "Othello," a beautiful animal, whose education has evidently not been neglected, for not only can he go through a correct military parade, but to the time of stones a heretic on a gridiron by the Bishop said to be deposed. The riding of young Gonsales standing on this horse back of two very spirited ponies, and the burlesque of Jockey Chinaman were excellent and during performance a skilful leaping of young Leotard, who finally went over the back of six horses placed side by side, was equal to anything of the kind we have seen before. On the slack wire Miss Gemmaine certainly at home, and her performance was one of the most successful of the evening. As the Mr. R. has announced that only six performances are to be given in Hongkong, when the company leaves for Manila.

Piracy in the Canton River.

From various sources, we gather the following particulars relating to the Pirates of the Canton river. On or about the 20th instant, a Junk coming from Canton to Hongkong, laden with 1,100 piculs of Bricks, was attacked and captured in Deep Bay. Early on the morning of the 24th instant, information was received to the effect that a Junk proceeding from Hongkong to Canton was attacked the day before and plundered of Taels 2,800 in silver. On the same morning, viz. 24th, Her Majesty's gunboats Bustard and Bouncer left this port and proceeded up the River, in order if possible to destroy the nest of Pirates. Further information must have been obtained, for on the evening of Tuesday, the 24th instant, Inspector Daly left the water police station with despatches, having instructions to find the gunboats and deliver the letters. The Inspector arrived at Castle Peak Bay about one o'clock on Wednesday morning, but in consequence of the ship being contrary, and their being no wind, anchored for the night. The next morning at daylight the ship being favorable, and there being a light wind, he proceeded through Urmston Sound to Deep Bay, where he found the Gunboats, and delivered his despatches.

Inspector Daly with a laudable view of discovering some of the piratical junks, went round the Lintin Island, and thence to Cum sing-moon Bay, landing at various places, but without discovering anything that might lead to the capture of the Celestial Buccaneers. The Inspector then went down to Macao, arriving there on Thursday afternoon, and was bowed from the place to Hongkong by one of the Hongkong, Canton, and Macao Co.'s steamers, arriving here yesterday morning.

The junk taken with bricks, which was attacked about the 20th instant, has been discovered in the Canton river, with seven men on board, all of them seriously wounded by stabbots. We further learn that on Thursday morning last, a junk was arrested in Macao by the Portuguese Authorities, with regard to whose piratical characters there could be no question.

Last night the two above named gunboats returned, without having accomplished anything, being unable to take advantage of the information conveyed to them by Inspector Daly, through their running short of coals.

IN ADMIRALTY.

BEFORE CHIEF-JUSTICE SMALE.

The Sir. Achilles v. The Eastward Ho.

THIRD DAY.

Mr. Pollard continued his argument.—Having disposed of the question of freight, he next went to the consideration of towage or salvage. He first put it that if there was a contract made for the services rendered, the question was not of towage or salvage, but one of whether this contract was carried out and fulfilled. On the case of the Carolina, he put it that there was in the present instance a contract, of this there could be no doubt. when the evidence now before the court was considered. Now, in regard to the evidence, he submitted that if one body of testimony was found consistent in all its parts, the court was bound to take this testimony in support of the facts alleged. Such a body of testimony was he contended to be found in the evidence given by all the witnesses brought forward on behalf of the impugnant. Why the first officer of the Achilles was sent on board the Eastward Ho the promovents did not say, but they were very ready in detailing what he did when he got on board, but even to the breeches full of a man, an officer, remaining on board, no significance could be attached. for even if the service were one of salvage, this would not assist or materially alter the fact in any way. The captain of the Eastward Ho having been in Hongkong before, knew that there were steam-tugs here available for the purpose of towing, and did also the master of the Achilles, and it would have been entirely compliance and a very simple matter for the master of the Eastward Ho to have sent a note to Hongkong by the Achilles, requesting that a tug might be sent out to him. The promovents had made a great deal about the extra services that had been performed, because their vessel was a steamer, and yet it is on evidence that as soon as the steamer took hold of the ship, she reduced her speed to one-third power, and instead of expediting them on their journey, actually retarded their progress; for not, that the captain, but also the pilot distinctly swore that without the steamer, they could, with the aids they had, and the breeze then blowing, have reached Hongkong between eleven and twelve o'clock that night, and yet with the aid of the powerful and splendid steamer, to a description of which considerable space was given in action petition; they were detained eight hours, not reaching Hongkong until four the next morning. The only result will be that the storm will blow rather harder in the very small teacup which is in a state of so much agitation already. The allegiance of the twenty or thirty obscure clergymen who form the episcopal locality of Nat tion to the proposal to eat horseflesh, an opposition as strong and as unreasoning as any that is likely to be found in England. For more than three years the authorities declined to give the requisite permission to open a shop in Paris for the sale. But as the French sympathizers proudly said, things have changed now. At the official reception at the beginning of the New Year, the Minister of Agriculture congratulated the French Committee on the results obtained. There are now twenty-three butchers' shops in Paris, at which nothing but horseflesh is sold, and it is, as a matter of fact, sold at a price much below that of beef. This certainly is a great result to have attained. For if the meat is sold it must be bought, and we should have thought that the difficulty of finding buyers would have been even greater than that of finding sellers. To get the poor to eat new thing, however salutary, cheap, and nutritious it did may be, is a real triumph. The Anglais poor hate all novelties. They will not eat rice, they will not even eat brown bread. They will have the whitest, puffiest, most stodgy bread they can get for their money. The day when there will be butcher's shops in London where the poor will buy millions of pounds of horseflesh, knowing that it is excellent, joyful, is far, far distant. But the beginning must be made, if such a thing is ever to be made; and that the necessary beginning has been made in England is fine to the enthusiasm and the perseverance of those who organized this dinner, and especially of Mr. Bicknell, to whom a bronze medal was appropriately sent, on the interesting occasion, by his French admirers.

History of the Brighton Railway.

(From the "Times.")

We propose this morning to tell our readers a story which they will find easy and lucid from beginning to end, and in which very many persons will feel a lively, not to say painful, interest. It is that tale of the Brighton Railway Company, and we should premise that, simple as it may now appear, it is not one of the oldest enhancers in the kingdom six months to make it out. Yet Mr. Lain had every advantage in the achievement of his task. He himself had been once chairman of this very Company, and possessed a knowledge of its affairs derived from the experience of actual administration. Twelve years had elapsed since his retirement from office, but nevertheless, when he resumed the duties in question it really took him the best part of a year to ascertain and measure the damage which the property had received in the interval. That information, however, he did at length acquire, and here it is for the benefit of the public.

In the year 1853 the capital of the Brighton Company—that is to say, the amount of money spent in erecting and establishing the Railway as a going concern, and on which, therefore, it is bound but to be found out of its earnings—was 3,000,000*l.* As the gross receipts of the line at the same period were 250,000*l.* a year, and the net earnings, or profits, about half that sum, it follows that the clear revenue of the line yielded an honest interest of between 4 and 5 per cent. on the capital employed. At the present moment the capital of the Company is 10,000,000*l.*, instead of 3,000,000*l.*—in other words, a second 3,000,000*l.* has been raised or borrowed and added to the first,—so that that interest has to be found on twice as much principal as before. If the receipts and profits of the line had increased in like proportion, the property would, of course, be neither better nor worse than formerly; but Mr. Laing now distinctly "pledges himself" to the fact, as revealed by his own investigations, that this second 3,000,000*l.* of capital, though it was borrowed at the rate of 5 per cent., has not produced "a single additional sixpence of net profit to the concern." If, therefore, the profits had remained stationary, and interest were payable out of them on 10,000,000*l.* instead of 3,000,000*l.*, the dividend of 4½ per cent. would simply have been reduced to 2½ but that is by no means the state of the case. The new capital was raised on conditions of preference—that is, its subscribers were to be paid their interest before the subscribers of the original capital got anything at all. Consequently, the proprietors who divided from 4 to 4½ per cent. in 1853 now get no dividend whatever, and, indeed, to such a depth of depreciation has the whole property been brought, that the income is not sufficient to satisfy even the preferential claims. In few words, the Brighton Company has borrowed and spent, since the year 1853, an amount of money equal to the value of the whole line at that period, without declaring any clear income from that enormous expenditure.

At this point two questions will naturally be asked—on what objects was all this money lavished? And what prospects or motives induced the directors of the concern to incur so prodigious an expense? The first reply is that the money in the main was spent upon useless and unproductive branches and cross lines yielding little or no return. The next explanation is that the directors were tempted, or driven, or hurried into such schemes by the circumstances of the time and the conditions of railway legislation. Mr. Laing admits in plain words that if any private gentleman had dealt with his property in a similar fashion it would be safe to set him down as either knave or fool, but he also adds, with equal candour, that in his anxiety to enhance the credit of the Company, by whom its affairs had been brought into this condition, were not liable to either of these imputations. He remarked, indeed, that the further he inquired the more he was convinced of the honour and integrity of those gentlemen. There had been gross mismanagement, but neither dishonesty nor fraud. The fact was that Parliament sanctioned unlimited competition in railway enterprise; this principle of legislation brought innumerable projectors into the field, and the Brighton Board of Directors, afraid of seeing their district invaded and their traffic carried off, promoted and executed these schemes of their own to keep the enemy at a distance. Mr. Laing is evidently disposed to visit Parliament with the greatest share of the blame, and expresses his opinion that it would have been wiser to confirm the Great Railway Companies in possession of their respective districts on terms of mutual advantage to them and to the public. Into this question we shall not enter, but though we agree with Mr. Laing in most of his views upon this subject, we think he has overrated the responsibility of Parliament in the matter, and underrated that of the Railway Directors.

Admitting that all these Boards were actuated by honest motives, it was surely not too much to expect from them a little more commercial prudence and ability. In fact, Mr. Laing himself demolishes much of the exculpation he has offered. The management of Railways, he tells us, was "amateur management," and a work which received the highest intellect and the clearest brains obtainable was often conducted on the system of "meeting once a week to take a glass of wine." There was no reality any where; perhaps they had seen that it was a question of bringing down their dividends to 3 or 4 per cent. by allowing the competing lines to pass, or of cutting their own throats by opposing those measures, they would have run the first chance rather than have had their property brought down to nothing, as it has been brought down." So wasteful a think, indeed, and what on earth is that some of these managers ought to have been discerning enough to see this question in its true light, without claiming to be protected in shortsightedness by the indulgence of Parliament. The truth of the matter is that this very competition was provoked and supported by the conduct of the established Companies themselves. They were often so greedy or so thoughtless, so grasping or so misguided, that any projectors could scent on them as prey. They were ready on the instant to resist attack or buy off any opposition, and so to create that very expenditure of money which the promoters of the ex ensus desired. Their true policy, as they have since been told, was to "stick to the original line," keep down capital, and let competing schemes do their worst." Such a policy would soon have brought competition to an end, although, indeed, on the worst of suppositions competition would have been positively harmless compared with the proceedings which were adopted against it.

Leaving the past, however, and coming, like a practical man, to the future, Mr. Laing asks us what is now to be done, and if the zeal can recall the arguments we have advanced for some time past on the subject of Railway Finance, he will not have long to seek for the reply. The "only remedy for what had occurred"—the salvation "of the Company"—was to be found in "closing the capital account." We may presume, perhaps, that the public now understand what this means. It means, in plain language, that the Company must pay its way out of its earnings. It shows, however, the state to which railway management has been brought, that Mr. Laing himself, though impressed with the necessity of this radical reform, hardly knows how it is to be accomplished, or how it will act. "The working with a closed capital account," said he, "is a new problem, and I should not like to pledge myself to the result." In other words, the habit of living more or less upon loans has become so inveterate with Railway Companies, and has bred so many expectations among shareholders, that, like other bad habits, it may be very hard to shake off. Yet there really is no doubt about the matter. Reform is a necessity in a double sense. It is to do only indispensable to the re-establishment of railway credit, but it is inevitable in itself. Capital accounts must need sooner or later be closed, because it will no longer be possible to keep them open—a contingency which in the case of the old Brighton lines has Mr. Laing tells us in so many words, actually occurred. There must in affairs be an end to loans when nobody can be found to lend, and Railway Companies, like private gentlemen, would be wise in anticipating that consummation by coming in good time to borrow.

There is a little story in Once a Week which supplies an amusing illustration of the odd results which sometimes attend the practice of binding over private persons to prosecute criminals. A Russian author, it seems, has gravely asserted that whenever a Russian has his pocket picked in England he is always put in prison for a fortnight while the thief is about his business. The incident from which this startling generalization was deduced is said to have been as follows:—A Russian captain having been robbed in Chinapolis, was bound over to prosecute the supposed thief. But his ship was ready for sea, and by the terms of the charter-party he was bound to sail the next day. He was offered the alternative of putting into a recognizance for £100, or being detained in prison, and preferred to go to prison; for then the owners of the ship, in which very many persons were interested, would be to blame. On the other hand, the friends of the prisoner, alleging his innocence, went before a judge at chambers, and prayed his liberation on bail. At the expiration of the fourteen days, the sittings at the Central Criminal Court were held. The Russian captain was brought up in custody. The accused, forfeiting his bail, did not appear; whereupon, without examination, the Russian was discharged, after having suffered fourteen days' imprisonment.

MARRIAGE OF THE REV. JOHN WILSON.—In the Strong Times of January 22nd, we read:—The marriage of Miss Hutchinson, daughter of W. H. P. Hutchinson, Esq., of Fromefield, to the Rev. John Wilson, chaplain of H.M.S. Iris, was celebrated on Thursday, in the Parish Church. The interesting ceremony was attended by a very large congregation. At half-past 10 the bride was received at the west door by the clergy and choir, and a procession was formed to the chancel. The bride was given away by her father, and was attended by four bridesmaids—namely, Miss Ommanney, Miss Lizzie Ommanney, Miss Rendle, and Miss Lilly Rendle. The bridegroom was supported by the Rev. H. Fisher, Sophia H.M. Forces, as his "best man." The service was throughout most solemn and impressive. The ex-deanery legal formalities having been observed, the bridal party left the church amidst the jubilant strains of the organ and the merry pealing of the bells. At Mr. Hutchinson's residence an elegant wedding breakfast was served by order of the Bath, to which a company of eighteen sat down. At 3 o'clock the happy couple left for Bath and London on their honeymoon tour, carrying with them the hearty good wishes of their many friends. The bridegroom was formerly curate of the Parish Church, and the bride has long been an active assistant in parish work. The handsome presents and the Holy Eucharist was administered, the celebrant being the Vicar, assisted by the Rev. T. H. Compton, the Rev. R. Lightfoot, and the Rev. H. E. M. Hughes.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Hongkong, Friday Evening.

There has been a fair inquiry for Bengal Drug, Patna at $9676 to $9720, Benares at $9365 to $9607, Old Patna $865 to $8693, Bali, Old Benares at $8724 to $875. Telegrams have been received from Calcutta, via Galle, by the steamer Benares, giving the result of the 3rd Government Opium sale. Patna consigned about Rs. 1,400, Benares Rs. 1,385; supplies expected to be about 3,500 chests. Malwa cessions in good native demand at $970 to $975, with reduction in weight of 1lb. to 2lbs. per pical. Foreigners have again been rejecting a good portion of the Drug bought at $950 to $970. The Benares has brought about 122 chests, and the mail steamer is likely to have between 1,300 and 1,500 ...

Business in the other departments of trade has been unusually dull to-day, and there seems to be scarcely anything doing. Many of the Chinese are at present away from the colony, engaged with the annual custom of visiting the graves of their ancestors, which always takes place at this season of the year, and consequently the absence of a very large portion of the native mercantile element. There are a few sales to report, including 400 pieces 9 lbs. Grey Shirtings at $2.50, and 500 pieces White Shirtings at $3.90, and 15 bales 26|32 Cotton Yarn at $137.50. Raw Cotton is very dull, only 60 bales Bombay staple have been reported sold to-day, at $18. They have been some sales of old and New Bank shares at 15 and 3 premium respectively, and a small lot of Union Dock at 25 discount, but beyond this we hear of nothing doing in this department of trade.
